

Michael Darroch is Assistant Professor of Communication Studies at the University of Windsor and is a Co-Investigator on the Visual City Project and Archive (York University). As a postdoctoral fellow at York University, he explored convergences in Canadian and German media and art theory, especially the influence of architectural theory and town planning on Marshall McLuhan. He completed his PhD in the Department of Art History & Communication Studies at McGill University and has also studied media theory, theatre, literature, and linguistics at the Université de Montréal, Universität Konstanz and Humboldt-Universität zu Berlin. His research interests include: German and Canadian theories of media and materialities; media art theory; urban studies and architecture; intermediality in theatre and performance; circulation, translation and multilingualism. He has published on aspects of technology, theatre, language and sound in city life, and is co-editing, with Janine Marchessault, the volume Urban Mediations: Art, Ethnography, and Material Culture. Recent publications include “Bridging Urban and Media Studies: Jaqueline Tyrwhitt and the Explorations Group 1951-1957,” in: Canadian Journal of Communication (forthcoming 2008) and (with Jean-François Morissette) “The Dragonfly of Chicoutimi: Staging Polyphony in Montréal and Toronto,” in: Urban Enigmas: Montréal, Toronto and the Problem of Comparing Cities (2007).