

Dr. Nancy Roth is Joint Course Leader of the M.A. Photography course at University College Falmouth, Cornwall, UK. With a background in art and photography criticism followed by formal training as an art historian (Ph.D. CUNY, 1996), she sought teaching positions primarily in art colleges, rather than in art history departments. In this context, faced with what seemed a crucial need to identify her own “medium” with respect to both colleagues and students, she began to consider how writing is aligned with drawing, painting, photography, video--all taught subjects in the art college. In this way she was drawn to the work of Vilem Flusser. She is committed to making more of his philosophy available in English.
